The Equality Act 2010

The information below is for guidance; for details of all policy and procedures see the HR website.

The new Equality Act came into force on 1 October 2010. The Equality Act brings together over 116 separate pieces of legislation into one single Act. Combined, they make up a new Act that will provide a legal framework to protect the rights of individuals and advance equality of opportunity for all.

In addition to prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination, the Equality Act has extended scope to:

- inclusion of discrimination by association or based on perception;
- indirect discrimination extended to disability and gender reassignment;
- hypothetical comparators now allowed in some gender pay claims;
- restrictions on health questionnaires in recruitment;
- wider tribunal powers to make recommendations

The Act’s employment provisions largely reflect the current law and cover all workers. As with current legislation the scope of the Act is broad enough so that protection from discrimination may extend to people who are not necessarily employees. This could include contract workers and, in some circumstances, volunteers.

An employee or agent (someone who works for you on your behalf) of the University are personally held accountable for acts of discrimination, harassment or victimisation. At the corporate level, the University Council is ultimately responsible for any breaches of the Equality Act, unless it can show that it took ‘all reasonable steps’ to prevent the discrimination, harassment or victimisation from taking place.

A summary overview of the Act can be found below, with further guidance available on the Equality and Human Rights Commission (EHRC) website, and the full version of the Act on the Government website:

- EHRC Guidance
- EHRC Equality Act good practice starter kit - videos and presentations to help you understand the Equality Act 2010
- Equality Act 2010

The Protected Characteristics

Protected characteristics are the grounds upon which discrimination in employment, education and provision of goods and services is unlawful. This covers the University’s staff, students and other service users/customers. The protected characteristics under Section 4 of the Equality Act 2010 are:

- Age
- Disability
- Gender reassignment
General Duties

All protected characteristics (with the exception of marriage and civil partnership) are subject to general public sector equality duty from April 2011 which require us to have due regard to:

- Eliminate discrimination
- Advance equality of opportunity by:
  - Removing/minimising disadvantage
  - Meeting different needs of protected groups
  - Encouraging participation in public life where low numbers are
- Foster good relations by:
  - Tackling prejudice (where tensions arise, address those tensions)
  - Promoting understanding

Specific Duties

The specific duties are designed to help organisations meet and show they have met the general duties require HEIs to publish:

- One or more equality objectives by 6 April 2012, and thereafter updated at least every four years. Equality objectives must be specific and measurable and relate to the achievement of the equality duty
- Information to demonstrate their compliance with the equality duty by 31 January 2012 and thereafter, at least annually.

The specific duties were drafted by the previous government. The Coalition Government has reviewed and delayed the enforcement of the specific duties.

The Home Office has announced that there is a debate in House of Lords likely to be held in September 2011, and the duties should then come into force following parliamentary approval. Further information is available on the Home Office Website.

Updates on the Equality Act can be found at: Equality Challenge Unit or ACAS Website.

Key Changes

Direct Discrimination based on association and perception

The new definition of direct discrimination extends protection based on association and perception to include:

- Age
- Disability
- Gender reassignment
- Sex
- Pregnancy and maternity

This is already applicable to race, sexual orientation and religion or belief. This change means that those providing case for someone due to a protected characteristic would be protected because of their association.
Extended protection for disabled people

Protection for disabled people has been extended:

- Indirect discrimination will be extended to disability
- A new protection for discrimination arising from disability will be introduced
- The duty to make reasonable adjustments for disabled people has been extended to when a disabled person experiences a ‘substantial disadvantage’. The previous duty applied when it was ‘impossible or unreasonably difficult’ for a disabled person to work, study or use a service

Abolition of Default Retirement Age

The default retirement age (that was set at 65) was abolished from 6 April 2011. It will be no longer possible to subject employees to compulsory retirement on or after 1 October 2011, unless the retirement can be justified in the particular circumstances. The University is no longer able to reject job applications from external candidates who are over 65; such applicants should be treated in the usual way. Age-related factors must not be used as a criteria for non-selection.

Breastfeeding now explicitly protected

A woman who is breastfeeding is now explicitly protected from unfavourable treatment in the areas of education and provision of services. This covers unfavourable treatment within a period of 26 weeks from when she has given birth. Outside of this 26-week period, a breastfeeding woman may be protected by the sex discrimination provisions.

New limitations on asking health related questions during staff recruitment and selection

The new provisions made it unlawful for an employer to ask about the health of a job applicant:

- Before offering work to an applicant
- Before including an applicant in a pool of shortlisted candidates from which the employer intends to select a person to offer work to

Removal of secrecy clause in discussing pay

The Equality Act 2010 introduces protection for people from victimisation by their employer if they discuss their pay with colleagues with a view to establishing differences in pay that may exist because of a protected characteristic. Employers will not be able to enforce any terms of employment or appointment that prevent or restrict discussions relating to pay.

Please also see Line Managers Briefing – 6 things you should know

Key Principles of Equality Law

Direct Discrimination

Direct discrimination is the legal term that applies if a person treats someone less favorably than they would another because of a protected characteristic they have or are thought to have or because they associate with someone who has a protected characteristic (see discrimination by association and perception below).

It is not possible to justify direct discrimination, so it is always unlawful (except in cases of single sex institutions that only admit applicants of one gender and in certain limited cases relating to religion or belief, e.g. where there is a genuine occupation requirement for a job).
The Equality Act 2010 extends protection based on association and perception already applicable to race, sexual orientation and religion or belief to include age, disability, gender reassignment, sex and pregnancy and maternity.

- Associative Discrimination – whereby a person is treated less favourably because of his/her association with someone who has a protected characteristic. For example, an employee is overlooked for promotion because their partner has undergone gender reassignment.

- Perceptive Discrimination – whereby a person is treated less favourably because he/she is mistakenly believed to have one of the protected characteristics. For example, an employer decides not to promote a female employee because senior staff believe her to pregnant irrespective of whether she is pregnant or not.

Indirect discrimination

This occurs when an organisation (for example, the University, or a member of staff at the University) makes a decision, or puts in place a particular policy or practice, which, on the face of it appears to treat everyone equally, but which actually, in practice, leads to people from a protected group being treated less favourably than other people. This is unless the person applying the provision can justify it as a proportionate means of achieving a legitimate aim.

All the protected characteristics except for pregnancy and maternity are covered.

Indirect discrimination may occur if, for example, an employer who requires staff to commit to working from 8pm to 11pm every evening indirectly discriminates against women, who are more likely to be primary carers of children, unless this can be objectively justified as above.

Harassment and Victimisation

Harassment on the basis of age, disability, gender reassignment, race, religion or belief, sex and sexual orientation is unlawful. It does not apply to pregnancy and maternity and marriage and civil partnership.

Complaints of harassment can be made regardless of whether or not the harassment was intentional.

Victimisation

Victimisation (defined in Section 27 of the Equality Act 2010) takes place where one person treats another less favourably because he or she has asserted their legal rights in line with the Act or helped someone else to do so.

In order to protect and support members of the University from harassment, the University has a Dignity Policy. This policy provides guidance on behaviour which may constitute harassment, information and advice for victims of harassment and informal dispute resolution through a trained network of advisors.
Positive Action

Positive action is a range of measures allowed under the Equality Act 2010 which can be lawfully taken to encourage and train people from under-represented groups to help them overcome disadvantages in competing with other applicants.

For example, the University often has a low rate of applications from women for academic and academic-related offices in certain subjects, such as science, engineering and technology. In order to improve this, initiatives, such as WiSETI or targeted actions may be undertaken.

Positive action must not be confused with positive discrimination which is unlawful, e.g. the setting of quotas (as opposed to targets, which are lawful) or any form of preferential treatment. Where positive action has been taken to encourage applicants from disadvantaged groups to apply, every applicant must be considered on individual merit and selection for interview and appointment must be based strictly on the agreed selection criteria.

The Equality Act 2010 does permit reasonable adjustments which may give preferential treatment to an individual with a disability.

The Government Equality Office has produced guidance on positive action.

Protected Characteristics

The protected characteristic definitions are taken from the Equality and Human Resources Commission.

Age

Where this is referred to, it refers to a person belonging to a particular age (e.g. 32 year olds) or range of ages (e.g. 18 - 30 year olds).

Disability

A person has a disability if s/he has a physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long-term adverse effect on that person's ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities.

Gender reassignment

The process of transitioning from one gender to another.

Marriage and civil partnership

Marriage is defined as a 'union between a man and a woman'. Same-sex couples can have their relationships legally recognised as 'civil partnerships'. Civil partners must be treated the same as married couples on a wide range of legal matters.

Pregnancy and maternity

Pregnancy is the condition of being pregnant or expecting a baby. Maternity refers to the period after the birth, and is linked to maternity leave in the employment context.
In the non-work context, protection against maternity discrimination is for 26 weeks after giving birth, and this includes treating a woman unfavourably because she is breastfeeding.

Race

It refers to a group of people defined by their race, colour, and nationality (including citizenship) ethnic or national origins.

Religion and belief

Religion has the meaning usually given to it but belief includes religious and philosophical beliefs including lack of belief (e.g. Atheism). Generally, a belief should affect your life choices or the way you live for it to be included in the definition.

Sex

A man or a woman.

Sexual orientation

Whether a person's sexual attraction is towards their own sex, the opposite sex or to both sexes