

Three audiences project privacy notice

Participation in this research study is entirely voluntary, and any published reference to your contributions will be anonymised unless you have given explicit permission for your name to be used. The questionnaire does ask for some personal information, e.g. your age, gender, nationality, in order to explore whether people in different categories give different answers. However, you can choose not to answer these questions. Participants in the focus-group will be given the same choice about whether or not to provide this kind of information.

The data you provide will be used to generate a general picture of readers' views on Three and on fiction set in ancient Greece; results may be published in a scholarly work or on-line. The original data resulting from the research will be stored in the personal files of the researcher, password-protected, for no more than seven years after publication of the research.

For more information on how we keep your data safe, see the University's Privacy Policy.
