and Hawise as sisters and one heir. From Matilda the right descended from her share to Adam, [her] son and heir. From Adam, because he died without heirs, the right reverted to Hawise as aunt and heir and sister of Matilda, Adam's mother. From Hawise the right descended wholly to John who now seeks as son and heir and in which William and John, his son, do not have entry except after the demise which Peter of Eastwood, John Brian's uncle, of whom he is heir, whilst he was not of sound mind, made to Thomas, parson of Carlton in Lindrick church and that the right should be as much as [was] John Brian's. He produces suit. William and John his son come and defend the force. John says for himself that he has nothing in the messuage nor claims to have at present. William replies as tenant of the messuage and says that however he is named William of Gratton, kt (chevalier); he says that he is called William Folejaumbe of Gratton and he is known by both names and he says that Ranulph of Wansley was seised of the messuage who gave it to William Folejaumbe of Gratton and Isabella his wife and their legitimate heirs. Isabella is dead. William as tenant as such state called to warrant by the aid of the king's court Joan widow of William de Cressy, daughter and one of the heirs of Ranulph of Wansley, and William son of William Folejaumbe of Gratton, kinsman, and one of the other heirs of Ranulph, who ought to be summoned in the county court and accepted to be called.
