Nottingham. John of Chilwell of Nottingham and Isolda his wife and Henry of Warwick of Nottingham and Emma his wife attached to reply to William of Denby of Nottingham concerning the plea whereof with force and arms they took and carried off William's goods and chattels to the value of £20 found at Nottingham and inflicted other enormities on him to the grievous damage of William and against the peace. William, by Thomas of Wilford his attorney, complained that John of Chilwell, Isolda, Henry and Emma on Mon after [the feast] of the assumption 33 Edward III (19 Aug 1359) with force and arms (sword) took and carried off William's goods and chattels: a bag (bagam) with 36s.8d., pots and pans (ollas et patellas) and other household utensils (alia utensilia domus) to the value [of £20] found at Nottingham and [inflicted] other enormities [on him] against the peace. Damages: £100. He produces suit. John of Chilwell, Isolda, Henry and Emma, [by] John of Kegworth their attorney, come and defend the force. On this comes Richard of Frisby, attorney of the mayor and bailiffs of Nottingham, to seek their liberty. Because other [liberties] of this kind were allowed to them in similar cases: between William Canycote of Nottingham pl and Henry Oulkyn and others ... as is clear in the roll for Easter term 19 Edward III (1345), it is adjudged that the mayor and bailiffs should have their liberty. Day given to the parties at Nottingham on Wed before the feast of St Thomas the Apostle (16 Dec 1360). It was said to the attorney that swift justice should be shown etc.

94 • At this court William of Denby of Nottingham offered himself, by Thomas of Wilford his attorney, v John of Chilwell of Nottingham, Isolda his wife, Henry of Warwick of Nottingham, and Emma his wife defs, who come by, John of Kegworth their attorney, and offered themselves. [They say that] when William of Denby by his count charges that John, Isolda,

Henry and Emma on Mon after [the feast] of the assumption 33 Edward III (19 Aug 1359) with force and arms (sword) took and carried off William's goods and chattels found at Nottingham: a bag with 36s.8d., pots and pans and other household utensils to the value of £20, and [inflicted] other enormities [on him] against the peace, and whereof he says that he is damaged to the value of £100, John of Chilwell, Isolda and Emma say, by John of Kegworth their attorney, they are not guilty. Henry, by John of Kegworth his attorney, comes and says that excepting a pot and a pan called a cauldron (caudron) he is not guilty; as to the pot and pan, he says that Joan atte Briggehinde was bound to Rose, William of Denby's wife, for 7s. and Rose resided (morabatur) with Henry with William of Denby's assent, and because Joan did not have ... Rose, the said debt ... except the said pot and pan called a cauldron and she came to Rose and sought the pot and pan in Henry's house, and Rose accepted ..., and because ... to the value of 8s., Rose asked that Henry should pay 12d. to Joan, which sum he paid and that he should keep the pot and pan until she was satisfied concerning 12d. Henry says that he was always ready to deliver the pot and pan to William or Rose or to any other [person] so that he could make satisfaction to her for 12d., and he still is. He seeks judgement if the attorney should have the pot and pan. William of Denby, by Thomas of Wilford his attorney, comes and says John, Isolda, Henry and Emma are guilty of the said trespass as the count and his writ charges. Inq. Henry, excepting a pot and a pan, similarly. As to the pot and pan, he seeks judgement. Precept to summon 12 jurors [on Wed] before the feast of Circumcision (30 Dec 1360).
