1 Key information

What? The RSC is an annual conference ran for PhD students, by PhD students. It allows students from across the world to network, present ideas and discuss their research in a friendly environment. This year students who attend the RSC can attend both online and in person (if studying in the UK or Ireland). Along with presenting their research, participants will attend lectures from industry professionals, lecturers specialising in areas in probability or statistics and sponsors.

Where? The University of Nottingham is proud to host the 45th Research Students Conference in Probability and Statistics (RSC 2022). The conference will be held on The University of Nottingham campus.

When? 5th - 8th September 2022.

3 Student talk schedule

To be determined.

4 Activity schedule

The RSC organising committee is excited to host a series of social activities for this event. Currently, the committee plan to have an archery workshop on the first night and have prepared a formal conference dinner on Wednesday evening at the local conference centre. The committee plans to hold another event on the Tuesday night, however we are wanting to hear from potential participants to see what they would like to do on this evening! If you have any ideas, please feel free to get in touch!

5 Travel

The RSC will be held on the campus of the University of Nottingham, which has great access to public transport. We encourage participants to make use of the tram service which can take you from the train station to the University. A more detailed document regarding travel will be released closer to the time of the event, but please contact if you have any questions.
