Examine key concepts and challenges in slavery, liberation and human rights

Overview
Taught by world-leading academic and practitioner experts, this internationally recognised distance-learning course is the first of its kind in the world. Not only will it provide you with the academic grounding of the study of contemporary slavery, but it also includes comprehensive training on how best to achieve the liberation and social reintegration of those in slavery.

This course is linked to the University’s Rights Lab – the world’s first large-scale research platform for ending slavery. It is currently tracking slavery with satellite technology and ensuring business don’t use slave labour. Find out more at nottingham.ac.uk/world/beacons/rights-lab

Content
You will be introduced to key concepts and challenges in slavery, liberation, anti-slavery and human rights, and will benefit from:

• an in-depth, academic look into an important and growing area of human rights work
• specialist practical training to plan and carry-out anti-slavery and anti-trafficking activities aimed at liberation, rehabilitation, reintegration, prevention, protection and prosecution
• training to enable you to conduct independent research in the specific area of human rights

Structure
As this is a distance-learning course, the majority of content will be taught online, allowing you to connect with the course and other students from across the globe. There are also opportunities for MA and PGDip students to study at Nottingham through intensive face-to-face modules, however, the PGCert can be completed solely online.

If you choose to study the MA or PGDip part-time, you won’t need to travel to Nottingham until your second year. Please note, the cost of transport, visas, accommodation and subsistence for the face-to-face element is in addition to course fees.

Assessment for each taught module will take place towards the end of each semester and is through a combination of coursework and participation. MA students will complete their studies with a 60-credit, 15,000-word dissertation. You will be allocated an appropriate dissertation supervisor who will oversee your progress.
