Narrative Guidelines

You have up to 500 words to describe your practice. You should focus on the ways in which you contribute to the learning environment and the impact your input has on both staff and students. To provide the reviewers with information on your practice you should refer to the following areas in your narrative:

Scope of your role: in this section detail the scale of your influence and whether this is at departmental, Faculty or institution level.

Value of your role: use this section to highlight the value of your input to staff and students. This could include, for example, the number of staff you work alongside and/or the number of students involved.

Impact: the difference your input has made to the learning environment, practice, policy or student outcomes.

You can support your narrative with a range of appropriate qualitative and/or quantitative data including:

- student feedback and evaluations;
- feedback from peer observations;
- feedback from colleagues;
- feedback from other national engagements;
- types of student support materials produced;
- work with other partner institutions and organisations.
